

Research → Implementation

Ryan Blackburn | Weekly Report 4/23 - 4/30

Concluding the final week of April with a strong note, I have been excited to indulge in concluding research that will assist me in executing my final product in weeks to come. Not only in concerns to my final product, my research this week has led me to feel more confident with Final Presentation Night this coming month, as well as with maintaining professional mannerisms and communicating efficiently with potential audience members. As I approach these conclusive weeks, I am excited to move into deeper practice with my presentation overall, as well as moving to complete my final product and advertising for Final Presentation Night.

The research I conducted this week helped to cement the methods I hope to utilize within my Final Product as I help execute specific aspects, such as the pledge program's advertisement through social media accounts. In addition, it aided me in realizing the disposition I hope to achieve for the campaign, which revolves around transparency, bipartisanship, and inclusiveness. In addition, I looked this week to practice my presentation and speaking skills, altering it especially for a more formal audience. I feel it was the most important aspect of my focus this week, as it will assist me well into my professional career to understand how to communicate with others on a formal level.